in the old testament, ashes were often placed on a person as a sign of mourning or grief, usually because of a death or because of personal sin.